A Review of Real Estate Fund Behaviour Following the EU Referendum

The EU Referendum was an unprecedented event, the result of which triggered widespread uncertainty in markets, no more so than in real estate.

Following the result, we commissioned John Forbes Consulting to undertake an independent review of the impact of the referendum result on real estate funds and to evaluate whether any improvements could be made to deal with market shocks in the future. The review aims to assess the impact not only on clients but on the market as a whole, including: fund distributors, managers, valuers and other service providers.

Following an extensive period of consultation with the real estate industry, John will present the key findings from the review following which attendees will be invited to discuss and provide feedback on the report in round table discussions. This will be used to further refine the report.

The report will be openly published prior to the event but a copy will be specifically emailed to all attendees. Although this is an open event, any feedback will be non-attributable.
